Blank (i)	Blank (ii)
predicament	unconvincing

해설

콜론(:) 뒤가 (i)을 설명한다: 기존 이론에 문제를 제기하는데, although 뒤 대안 이론은 (ii).

Unlike herbivores and omnivores, predators have traditionally been thought not to balance nutrient intake because of the assumption that animal tissue as a food source varies little and is nutritionally balanced. But chemical analysis of invertebrate prey reveals remarkable variation in nutrient composition among species; even within species, nutrient composition may vary considerably. Greenstone suggested that predators may select food items according to their nutrient contents. Jensen et al (2011) have shown experimentally that even sit-and-wait invertebrate predators with limited mobility can work to address nutrient deficiencies. The wolf spider, for instance, has been shown to regulate nutrient intake by extracting more dry mass from a prey item if it contains a higher proportion of a nutrient that was deficient in the previous prey.

Julie Roy Jeffrey's recent book《The Great Silent Army of Abolitionism》shows how women participated in all aspects of the antislavery movement in the United States, from its inception in the early 1830s through the end of the Civil War (1861–1865). While scholars have already pointed out the importance of women's work in early abolitionist circles, especially in spreading a grassroots antislavery message through the constant and tireless circulation of petitions, Jeffery disputes certain aspects of the traditional account of their participation. For example, even though the abolitionist movement split into political and nonpolitical wings at the end of the 1830s and women were largely relegated to the less politicized faction, Jeffrey does not accept the view that women's participation became marginalized as a result. She demonstrates that women found numerous ways to persist effectively in the cause, such as by organizing the antislavery fund-raising fairs of the 1840s. She also disputes the notion that African American women were relegated to secondary positions in the largely White movement. Their own abolitionist societies, she argues, often responded to the crises of the pre-Civil War decades, such as the Fugitive Slave Law, more directly than did integrated abolitionist groups.

American and British critics who wrote enthusiastic reviews of west African writer Amos Tutuola's 1952 book《The Palm-Wine Drinkard》typically dwelt less on his rhetorical skills and more on the text as an exemplar of naïve art. While these metropolitan critics were enchanted by the book, the initial literary reception in west Africa was by contrast highly critical. Concerned to avoid stereotyping, critics there objected to what they saw as very poor writing and expressed dismay at the uncritical promotion of the book. Many protested against what they saw as a metropolitan celebration of exoticism. For example, Adeagbo Akinjogbin attributed the novel's success in the West to ignorance and a desire to believe "all sorts of fantastic tales about Africa."

Unlike the static, classically composed portraits produced by her mentor Walker Evans, twentieth-century New York photographer Helen Levitt's photographs seem candid and spontaneous. Whereas Evans' subjects look directly into the camera, so that photographer and subject conspire in the making of a portrait, Levitt's subjects seem caught unawares. As a "street" photographer, before the term's invention, Levitt has claimed to have attempted to capture life as she found it. But there is a paradox to her technique. Her off-the-cuff aesthetic seemingly guarantees objectivity, since she was recording street scenes she happened upon, yet her photographs could be said to be highly subjective, to be reflections of Levitt's own distinctive preoccupations and ways of seeing. Unlike Evans' images, Levitt's are solely the products of the photographer without the conscious participation of their subjects. The repetitions evident in Levitt's choices of subjects, for example, her many photographs of children in masks and disguises, reveal more about Levitt herself than about those subjects.

A(스튜디오가 아닌 공공장소)는 거리 사진의 특징이지만, 객관성을 보장하는 이유는 '장소'가 아니라 '연출하지 않음'이다.
B(개인적 친분)는 언급 없음.

○B The subjects in an Evans' photograph become collaborators in the portrait's creation.

○C Evans' photographic portraits usually reveal more about Evans than they do about his subjects.

○D Evans' static, classically composed portraits reveal Evans' preoccupation with maintaining an appearance of objectivity.

○E Evans' static, classically composed portraits reveal little about his distinctive way of seeing.

해설

The passage suggests which of the following about street photography?

○B It tends to depict a narrow and repetitious range of subject matter.

○C It creates the impression of spontaneity but often actually involves scenes contrived by the photographer.

- ☐ A unwieldy
- ☐ B insalubrious
- ☐ C unremunerative
- ☐ D unnecessary
- ☐ E inopportune

Demographic data for Ollene Province indicate that over the next ten years the number of teenagers will decline and the number of children under the age of ten will rise. Most parents whose children are under ten and who want childcare during evening hours hire a babysitter who comes to their home, and virtually all babysitters are teenagers. For American artist Lucy Lippard, politically engaged art necessarily existed primarily outside of traditional art venues, in public spaces and in direct confrontation with political power. But for some other 1970s New York artists, it was inside the art world—and especially within museums—that the machinations of power could best be exposed and examined. Artists such as Adrian Piper worked within the genre known as "institutional critique" that explored and confronted the political and economic entanglements of museum patronage. Artists engaged in such work were often criticized for participating in the very art world system they purported to challenge. Yet their rigorous methodologies for researching and dramatically staging interventions in museum spaces yielded some of the era's most politically astute and influential artworks.
