Questions 4 to 5 are based on the following passage.

Scientific consensus is that humans first began to have a warming effect on Earth's climate within the past century, after coal-burning factories, power plants, and motor vehicles began releasing carbon dioxide (CO_2) and other greenhouse gases in significant quantities into the air. However, evidence suggests that human agricultural activities may have had such an effect much earlier: concentrations of CO_2 started rising about 8000 years ago, even though natural trends indicate they should have been dropping; methane levels rose similarly about 3,000 years later. Without these rises, however, current temperatures in northern parts of North America and Europe would be cooler by three to four degrees Celsius—enough to inhibit agriculture—and an ice age would probably have begun several thousand years ago in northeastern Canada.

Question 4 RC

Select one answer choice.

Which of the following best describes the function of the highlighted sentence ("However, evidence ~ years later.")?

○A It undermines the assumption that human activity has had a significant impact on Earth's climate.

○B It supports the assumption that Earth's temperatures have risen appreciably over the past 100 years.

○C It questions the assumption that greenhouse gases have had a warming effect on Earth's climate.

○D It challenges the assumption that human activity began to affect Earth's climate after the advent of industrialization.

○E It supports the assumption that greenhouse gases are a direct by-product of industrial activities.

Question 5 RC

(Highlighted portion: "natural trends")

Select one answer choice.

The author mentions "natural trends" most likely in order to

○A propose a possible explanation for why current temperatures in North America and Europe are not as low as they might otherwise be

○B explain why levels of methane in Earth's atmosphere began to rise approximately 5,000 years ago

○C suggest that Earth's climate would have become even warmer without the advent of human agricultural activities

○D identify factors that may have contributed to the rise of greenhouse gases in Earth's atmosphere approximately 8,000 years ago and again some 3,000 years later

○E support the claim that human activity may have played a role in the rise in CO_2 and methane levels in the atmosphere thousands of years ago

Questions 10 to 12 are based on the following passage.

Scholars have advanced various reasons for the small number of biographies that have been written about African American subjects. Some have observed that biographical studies are not considered ambitious projects by academic institutions and thus are avoided by scholars who are seeking tenure and promotion. A more important reason, however, may be that autobiography has been the favored medium of expression in African American culture from its inception, while biography has been accorded lower status. The "I" of autobiography receives considerably more cultural respect than the "she" or "he" of biography. This preference can best be understood in light of the project of reclaiming personal identity. For example, autobiographical slave narratives were works through which African Americans articulated their individual identities in the face of oppression. Another reason for the paucity of biographies is that the existence of autobiographical narratives by African Americans can deter biographical writing about them.

Question 10 RC

Select one answer choice.

The primary purpose of the passage is to

- ○ A examine a questionable notion
- ○ B analyze a historical process
- ○ C question the soundness of a method
- ○ D propose explanations for a situation
- ○ E discuss two rival theories

Question 11 RC

Select one answer choice.

The author of the passage suggests which of the following as a reason for the difference in status between autobiography and biography in African American culture?

○A Autobiography has been more closely studied in academic institutions than has biography.

○B Autobiography has been regarded as more objective than biography.

○C Autobiography has been more important in reclaiming personal identity than has biography.

○D Autobiography conventionally has been written in a more formal style than has biography.

○E Autobiography has been regarded as an older and thus more respectable genre of writing than has biography.

Question 12 RC

Select one answer choice.

According to the passage, which of the following is true of autobiographical works?

○A They have occupied an important place in African American literature from its beginnings.

○B Their study has been systematically neglected in academic institutions.

○C They are the main vehicle that African Americans have used to reclaim personal identity.

○D They are more likely to be written by oppressed individuals than by those who have not experienced oppression.

○E They enjoy higher status among nonacademics than among academics.

Questions 5 to 6 are based on the following passage.

> The dramatic growth of sugar production after the mid-seventeenth century enabled the articulation of a relatively new distinction within the European understanding of food taste, namely, the difference between savory and sweet. Earlier, salty and sweet tastes had been intermingled in medieval and Renaissance cooking, but with ever-increasing quantities of sugar available on the market, it became possible and desirable to distinguish between the two. Sweetness became relegated to fewer dishes, but much greater amounts of sugar were used in those dishes. The distinction between sweet and savory ended the older tradition of strongly flavored, deeply spiced sauces and condiments that marked European elite cuisine for centuries, heralding a new cuisine which claimed to pay more respect to its ingredients' intrinsic flavors.

Question 5 RC

Select one answer choice.

The author of the passage suggests that the increase in sugar production during the seventeenth century

- ○A changed the types of flavors highlighted in elite European cuisine
- ○B had detrimental effects on the health of Europeans
- ○C lowered the price of sugar to levels affordable by the masses
- ○D was accompanied by the popularization of strongly flavored condiments
- ○E encouraged the intermingling of salty and sweet tastes

Question 6 RC

(Highlighted portion: "new cuisine")

Select one answer choice.

It can be inferred that proponents of the "new cuisine" would be most likely to agree with which of the following statements about sugar?

- ○A It should be used primarily in dishes that are served with deeply spiced sauces.
- ○B It can obscure the distinctive flavors of certain ingredients used in many dishes.
- ○C Its more extensive availability had a regrettable effect on the preparation of many dishes.
- ○D Its frequent appearance in savory dishes contrasted sharply with earlier traditions of cooking.
- ○E It should be used sparingly even in dishes intended to be sweet.

Questions 7 to 9 are based on the following passage.

Late-eighteenth-century English cultural authorities seemingly concurred that women readers should favor history, seen as edifying, over fiction, which was regarded as frivolous and reductive. Readers of Mary Ann Hanway's novel Andrew Stewart, or the Northern Wanderer, learning that its heroine delights in David Hume's and Edward Gibbon's histories, could conclude that she was more virtuous and intelligent than her sister, who disdains such reading. Likewise, while the naïve, novel-addicted protagonist of Jane Austen's Northanger Abbey, Catherine Morland, finds history a chore, the sophisticated, sensible character Eleanor Tilney enjoys it more than she does the Gothic fiction Catherine prefers.

Yet in both cases, the praise of history is more double-edged than it might actually appear. Many readers have detected a protofeminist critique of history in Catherine's protest that she dislikes reading books filled with men "and hardly any women at all." Hanway, meanwhile, brings a controversial political edge to her heroine's reading, listing the era's two most famous religious skeptics among her preferred authors. While Hume's history was generally seen as being less objectionable than his philosophy, there were widespread doubts about his moral soundness even as a historian by the time that Hanway was writing, and Gibbon's perceived tendency to celebrate classical paganism sparked controversy from the first appearance of his history of Rome.

Question 7 RC

Select one answer choice.

The author's primary purpose is to suggest that

○A the evidence used in support of a particular argument is questionable

○B a distinction between two genres of writing has been overlooked

○C a particular issue is more complex than it might appear

○D two apparently different works share common features

○E two eighteenth-century authors held significantly different attitudes toward a particular issue

Question 8 RC

Select one answer choice.

According to the passage, which of the following is true of Hume's reputation in the late eighteenth century?

○A He was more highly regarded as a historian than Gibbon.

○B His historical writing, like his philosophical writing, came to be regarded as problematic.

○C He was more well-known for his historical writing than for his philosophical writing.

○D His historical writing came to be regarded as morally questionable because of his association with Gibbon.

○E His views about classical paganism brought him disapproval among the general reading public.

Question 9 RC

Select one answer choice.

The highlighted sentence exemplifies which of the following?

○A Cultural authorities' attempt to use novels to support their view about the value of reading fiction

○B Eighteenth-century women authors' attempts to embody in their work certain cultural authorities' views about reading

○C A point about the educational value of reading books about history

○D An instance in which a particular judgment about the value of reading history is apparently presupposed

○E A challenge to an assumption about eighteenth-century women's reading habits

Question 10 SE

Question 13 is based on the following passage.

> The damage that trucks do to highways escalates dramatically with the weight borne per axle. New regulations increase the maximum permitted vehicle weight; these regulations will therefore allow onto the highway trucks capable of doing even more damage than those currently permitted.

Question 13 CR

Select one answer choice.

The argument is open to criticism on the grounds that it

- ○ A fails to establish that the level of damage done by trucks is a serious problem
- ○ B omits evidence about one of the two relevant factors
- ○ C ignores the possibility that careful driving can lessen damage to highways
- ○ D presumes that trucks are the only vehicles capable of causing substantial damage to highways
- ○ E presumes that something is bound to happen just because it is allowed to happen

Questions 14 to 15 are based on the following passage.

> Washburn's examination of textile designs from the precolonial Kuba Kingdom in Africa reveals that, despite a theoretical embrace of infinite formal variation, there exists in practice a limited number of pattern structures with creativity channeled into developing nuanced variations on those designs. A parallel sensibility informs the Kuba approach to the ndop fiqurative sculptures depicting paramount leaders. While one might assume royal portraits capture the unique image of each leader, in practice Kuba sculptors adapted a preferred figurative convention. Although the ndop figures themselves are so homogeneous that they are essentially expunged of any idiosyncratic physiognomic features, the embedded ibol signifier (a symbolic emblem incorporated into the base of each sculpture) and an accompanying explanatory proverb invest each image with a particular identity.

Question 14 RC

Select one answer choice.

Which of the following is an accurate statement about Kuba ndop sculptures as they are described in the passage?

- ○A The ibol signifiers they contain show insignificant formal variation.
- ○B There are minimal differences in their facial features.
- ○C The identification of each with a historical person is a modern-day assumption.
- ○D Individual sculptures have historically been associated with specific textile patterns.
- ○E The proverbs that accompany them were chosen by the leaders they portray.

Question 15 RC

(Highlighted portion: "Washburn's examination")

Select one answer choice.

The passage mentions "Washburn's examination" in order to

- ○A correct a misconception regarding the role of creativity in Kuba art
- ○B reassert a widely accepted theory regarding the pattern structures found in Kuba textiles
- ○C compare the ways in which two types of Kuba art developed historically
- ○D draw attention to a similarity between two genres of Kuba art
- ○E provide an example of a genre for which Kuba artists are renowned
