Scientific consensus is that humans first began to have a warming effect on Earth's climate within the past century, after coal-burning factories, power plants, and motor vehicles began releasing carbon dioxide (CO_2) and other greenhouse gases in significant quantities into the air. However, evidence suggests that human agricultural activities may have had such an effect much earlier: concentrations of CO_2 started rising about 8000 years ago, even though natural trends indicate they should have been dropping; methane levels rose similarly about 3,000 years later. Without these rises, however, current temperatures in northern parts of North America and Europe would be cooler by three to four degrees Celsius—enough to inhibit agriculture—and an ice age would probably have begun several thousand years ago in northeastern Canada.

Scholars have advanced various reasons for the small number of biographies that have been written about African American subjects. Some have observed that biographical studies are not considered ambitious projects by academic institutions and thus are avoided by scholars who are seeking tenure and promotion. A more important reason, however, may be that autobiography has been the favored medium of expression in African American culture from its inception, while biography has been accorded lower status. The "I" of autobiography receives considerably more cultural respect than the "she" or "he" of biography. This preference can best be understood in light of the project of reclaiming personal identity. For example, autobiographical slave narratives were works through which African Americans articulated their individual identities in the face of oppression. Another reason for the paucity of biographies is that the existence of autobiographical narratives by African Americans can deter biographical writing about them.

The dramatic growth of sugar production after the mid-seventeenth century enabled the articulation of a relatively new distinction within the European understanding of food taste, namely, the difference between savory and sweet. Earlier, salty and sweet tastes had been intermingled in medieval and Renaissance cooking, but with ever-increasing quantities of sugar available on the market, it became possible and desirable to distinguish between the two. Sweetness became relegated to fewer dishes, but much greater amounts of sugar were used in those dishes. The distinction between sweet and savory ended the older tradition of strongly flavored, deeply spiced sauces and condiments that marked European elite cuisine for centuries, heralding a new cuisine which claimed to pay more respect to its ingredients' intrinsic flavors.

Late-eighteenth-century English cultural authorities seemingly concurred that women readers should favor history, seen as edifying, over fiction, which was regarded as frivolous and reductive. Readers of Mary Ann Hanway's novel Andrew Stewart, or the Northern Wanderer, learning that its heroine delights in David Hume's and Edward Gibbon's histories, could conclude that she was more virtuous and intelligent than her sister, who disdains such reading. Likewise, while the naïve, novel-addicted protagonist of Jane Austen's Northanger Abbey, Catherine Morland, finds history a chore, the sophisticated, sensible character Eleanor Tilney enjoys it more than she does the Gothic fiction Catherine prefers.

Yet in both cases, the praise of history is more double-edged than it might actually appear. Many readers have detected a protofeminist critique of history in Catherine's protest that she dislikes reading books filled with men "and hardly any women at all." Hanway, meanwhile, brings a controversial political edge to her heroine's reading, listing the era's two most famous religious skeptics among her preferred authors. While Hume's history was generally seen as being less objectionable than his philosophy, there were widespread doubts about his moral soundness even as a historian by the time that Hanway was writing, and Gibbon's perceived tendency to celebrate classical paganism sparked controversy from the first appearance of his history of Rome.

○B omits evidence about one of the two relevant factors

근거: 새 규정은 '차량 최대 총중량'을 늘림.

정답: B

⚠ 함정 / 오답 포인트
E: 결론이 '허용할 것(allow)'이고 실제로 손상이 일어난다고 주장하지 않으므로 이 비판은 해당하지 않음.

Washburn's examination of textile designs from the precolonial Kuba Kingdom in Africa reveals that, despite a theoretical embrace of infinite formal variation, there exists in practice a limited number of pattern structures with creativity channeled into developing nuanced variations on those designs. A parallel sensibility informs the Kuba approach to the ndop fiqurative sculptures depicting paramount leaders. While one might assume royal portraits capture the unique image of each leader, in practice Kuba sculptors adapted a preferred figurative convention. Although the ndop figures themselves are so homogeneous that they are essentially expunged of any idiosyncratic physiognomic features, the embedded ibol signifier (a symbolic emblem incorporated into the base of each sculpture) and an accompanying explanatory proverb invest each image with a particular identity.
