Question 3 TC 3빈칸

For each blank, select one entry from the corresponding column of choices.

When learners are engaged in mathematical problem-solving, their activity does not have from the outset the structure of what will be considered a mathematical proof. Instead, a tangle of intuitions, know-how, factual knowledge, and a variety of other mental constructs allows learners to entertain choices and make decisions. Nonetheless, (i) _____ such mental activity (ii) _____ is (iii) _____: in many situations this process works, although it can prove to be wrong as a result of overgeneralizations.

Blank (i)	Blank (ii)	Blank (iii)
concealing	from scrutiny	uncommon
adapting	as confused	unintentional
describing	to the task	uncharitable

Questions 4 to 5 are based on the following passage.

Isobel Grundy rightly argues that in researching pre-nineteenth-century women's historical writing, scholars must define history broadly and include historical fiction, biography, court memoirs, and family history. Grundy also believes that these writings provide "a history of a whole female culture, while embodying a pre-nineteenth-century feminine" relationship to history. On this point, I am skeptical, as I do not believe there was a characteristic women's relationship to history. Instead, my research suggests that pre-nineteenth-century British women writers' engagement with historical discourse depended on such things as their political commitments and class affiliations and their perceptions of developing historical genres and markets. We must give sufficient attention to the myriad individual authors and texts before generalizing widely about women writers' engagements with history.

Question 4 RC

(Highlighted portion: "historical fiction, biography, court memoirs, and family history")

Select one answer choice.

The passage implies that its author would agree with which of the following statements about "historical fiction, biography, court memoirs, and family history"?

○A These genres had their origins primarily among pre-nineteenth-century British women writers.

○B These genres were probably more reflective of women's views in pre-nineteenth-century Britain than they were in later periods.

○C These genres can help scholars develop a comprehensive view of British women's historical writing.

○D These genres have generally been regarded by scholars as more reliable sources of information about pre-nineteenth-century women than have other genres of historical writing.

○E These genres are remarkably homogeneous in the way they represent the lives of pre-nineteenth-century women in Britain.

Question 5 RC

Select one answer choice.

Which of the following describes a difference between the author and Grundy regarding British women writers' engagement with historical discourse?

○A The author thinks the engagement was determined primarily in response to developing literary markets; Grundy thinks it had little to do with such markets.

○B The author believes the engagement is reflected in numerous genres; Grundy thinks that one genre is specifically feminine.

○C The author emphasizes the heterogeneity of factors that influenced the engagement; Grundy suggests that the engagement was unified by one particular factor.

○D The author thinks the engagement was limited to women in certain social classes; Grundy thinks it was common to all classes.

○E The author believes the engagement was just beginning in the late 1700s; Grundy thinks it reached its peak then.

- ☐ F unrelenting

Questions 10 to 12 are based on the following passage.

In the late 1920s, the noted writer Lu Xun, who was also the primary figure behind the modern Chinese woodcut movement, began to introduce modern Western woodcuts into China. Lu Xun believed that Western artists' emphasis on linearity and sharp black-and-white contrasts gave their art a distinctly serious quality, very different from the largely decorative nature of the traditional, richly colored Chinese woodcut. But he also believed that the most important ingredient in the Western woodcut was its close link to the broader society, an element missing in the Chinese woodcut tradition. It is true that Lu Xun was deeply impressed by the Western artists' techniques, which enabled them to evoke human emotions through gestures and facial expressions, but his decision to introduce their works was prompted more by his admiration of the works' role in the struggle for social and political justice than by his interest in technique and craftsmanship. Lu Xun realized that woodcuts could do more than evoke emotions; they could be used as an educational tool to reshape public consciousness.

Question 10 RC

Select one answer choice.

The passage is primarily concerned with

- ○ A tracing the history of an art form in a particular culture
- ○ B identifying similarities between two different cultures' use of an art form
- ○ C examining an individual's views about a particular art form
- ○ D correcting a misconception about a particular culture's use of an art form
- ○ E refuting a theory about the development of a particular art form

Question 11 RC

Select one answer choice.

Which of the following best describes the purpose of the highlighted sentence?

○A To point out one of Lu Xun's concerns that was eventually outweighed by other considerations

○B To rank the importance of the factors that influenced Lu Xun in making a decision

○C To emphasize the complexity of the modern Western woodcut's effect on society

○D To explain an apparently contradictory aspect of Western woodcuts

○E To describe the ways in which Lu Xun succeeded in making modern Chinese woodcuts more like Western woodcuts

Question 12 RC

Select one answer choice.

The passage suggests that Lu Xun believed which of the following about traditional Chinese woodcuts?

○A They were more similar in technique than in content to Western woodcuts.

○B They were less successful than were other Chinese art forms in reshaping public consciousness.

○C They were taken less seriously as an art form in Chinese society than they had once been.

○D They were not aimed at furthering social and political justice.

○E They had been used primarily to evoke human emotions.

Questions 5 to 6 are based on the following passage.

Since the 1970s, there has been a movement in African literary studies toward the recognition of national literatures in newly independent African states, such as Cameroon, Senegal, and Benin. But while in some of these national literatures there has undoubtedly emerged a sense of corporate identity, often marked by clear thematic and formal progressions, it remains an incontrovertible fact that the European languages in which these literatures are expressed have only an official acceptance: they are neither indigenous to the cultures on which they have been imposed, nor are they national in any real sense of the word. This must limit the claims of any of these literatures to national significance, however abundant the corpus or coherent the internal configurations.

Question 5 RC

Select one answer choice.

According to the passage, certain African literatures have

- ○A undergone significant changes since the 1970s
- ○B flourished as a result of governmental support
- ○C been directed primarily at non-African audiences
- ○D avoided openly discussing sensitive cultural issues
- ○E achieved a degree of internal cohesiveness

Question 6 RC

Select one answer choice.

The highlighted portion ("they ~ the word") of the passage serves primarily to

- ○A support a conclusion stated later in the passage
- ○B qualify an assertion presented earlier in the passage
- ○C suggest an explanation for an anomaly mentioned in the passage
- ○D offer a tentative answer to a question raised in the passage
- ○E justify the use of a term introduced earlier in the passage

Questions 7 to 9 are based on the following passage.

In the absence of reliable data concerning the relationship between the material quality (i.e., physical condition) and the price of used books, it is impossible to offer statistically exact information for the impact of the used-book market on the cost of reading in eighteenth-century England. Yet, it can hardly be doubted that such an impact occurred, not only through the standard behavior of markets but inferentially through the innovative design and packaging strategies that London booksellers increasingly resorted to from 1760 in order to identify (and no doubt also create) more finely differentiated classes of readers. Fortunately, we can also call on extensive, independent price lists for eighteenth-century books published in Britain to track differences in the cost of new and used volumes of the same title, edition, and format. To the extent that new list prices for successive editions of the same work in a uniform format remain constant or increase at a lesser rate than consumer prices generally, the hypothesis that the secondary book market exercised a drag on book prices would gain fresh support. At the same time, variance in price among new and used copies of any given title and edition can be used as a proxy for material quality determinations in the two markets.

Question 7 RC

Select one answer choice.

The primary purpose of the passage is to ○A point out impediments to assessing the relative cost of books in eighteenth-century England

○B explain why eighteenth-century England saw significant growth in the availability of used books

○C identify means for evaluating the effects of used books on the book market in eighteenth-century England

○D argue that the availability of used books lowered prices in the book market overall in eighteenth-century England

○E show how the decreasing price of books in eighteenth-century England led to the diversification of the book market

Question 8 RC

(Highlighted portion: "the standard behavior of markets")

Select one answer choice.

The author cites "the standard behavior of markets" primarily to

○A support a claim about differentiated classes of readers

○B support a claim about the used book market

○C account for certain marketing strategies on the part of booksellers

○D account for an absence of a particular kind of data

○E account for an increase in the cost of reading

Question 9 RC

(Highlighted portion: "innovative design and packaging strategies")

Select one answer choice.

The author of the passage mentions "innovative design and packaging strategies" primarily to

○A note a way in which eighteenth-century English booksellers worked together to standardize book prices

○B highlight evidence that suggests a response on the part of eighteenth-century English booksellers to shifting prices in the book market

○C provide an example of how the presence of used books in the eighteenth-century English book market affected the average price of new book

○D indicate one means by which eighteenth-century English booksellers tried to counteract a drop in the total number of books being sold

○E discuss one strategy by which eighteenth-century English booksellers attempted to take advantage of an expansion in the number of readers

Question 10 SE

Select the two answer choices that produce completed sentences that are alike in meaning.

For all the _____ the new CEO has received from the press recently, her staff have a decidedly less rosy view of her.

☐A encomiums

☐B tributes

☐C evaluations

☐D critiques

☐E attention

☐F publicity

Question 11 SE

Select the two answer choices that produce completed sentences that are alike in meaning.

While the group's street protests assumed an assertory uncompromising tenor, once admitted to the halls of power to begin formal lobbying, the group's leadership wisely chose to _____ the stridency of their rhetoric.

☐A metamorphose

☐B gild

☐C wane

☐D palliate

☐E succor

☐F damp

Question 12 SE

Select the two answer choices that produce completed sentences that are alike in meaning.

The figure of the female orator, though indubitably _____, was far from unknown in fifteenth-century Italy.

- ☐ A controversial
- ☐ B distrusted
- ☐ C constrained
- ☐ D self-effacing
- ☐ E exotic
- ☐ F anomalous

Question 13 is based on the following passage.

> Some people deplore the fact that many of the world's major rivers, such as the Yellow River, the Colorado, and the Nile, now run dry before reaching the sea. The primary reason these rivers run dry is that their water is diverted for irrigation of food crops. The world's increasing population requires an increasing food supply. Thus, as a response to this need, at least, the draining of the major rivers is beneficial.

Question 13 CR

Select one answer choice.

The argument depends on the assumption that

- ○ A climate change is responsible for the decrease in water in many of the world's major rivers
- ○ B river water is the single largest source of water for crop irrigation worldwide
- ○ C none of the water from the rivers is reused after being initially used for irrigation of crops
- ○ D using the water of the rivers for personal hygiene is less important than using it to increase food supplies
- ○ E failure of the water to reach the sea does not decrease the production of fisheries at the outlets of the rivers enough to outweigh the increased crop yields

Questions 14 to 15 are based on the following passage.

> New Zealand's lesser short-tailed bat, Mystacina tuberculata, is one of only two bat species to use a true walking gait when maneuvering on the ground. It has been assumed that the specialized terrestrial habits of mystacinids evolved in New Zealand following their isolation there. Absence of native terrestrial mammalian predators in New Zealand has been hypothesized to have facilitated evolution of terrestriality. However, although it is likely that terrestrial foraging by extant Mystacina tuberculata makes it vulnerable to introduced mammalian predators, there is as yet limited available data on the actual risk of terrestriality. Indeed, Lloyd argues that although some individuals may be caught on the ground, generally they would not be easy prey: they are cryptic, fast-moving, with acute hearing and olfaction, and can quickly take flight.

Question 14 RC

Select one answer choice.

The passage is primarily concerned with

○A outlining certain difficulties associated with the study of a particular species

○B suggesting that the development of a phenomenon was not predicated upon a particular condition

○C pointing out that a particular event is rarely known to occur

○D detailing evidence that refutes a commonly held notion

○E evaluating rival interpretations of a phenomenon

Question 15 RC

Select one answer choice.

Which of the following can be inferred from the passage about Mystacina tuberculata?

○A It derives benefits from ground foraging that outweigh the risks of predation.

○B Its flying ability is in some respects diminished in comparison with most other bat species.

○C Its isolation in New Zealand has led to a misunderstanding regarding its abilities.

○D It has developed keener hearing than most other bat species.

○E It is not subject to predation by other bat species.
