Questions 4 to 5 are based on the following passage.

Modern scholarship's view of women's labor in Han dynasty China (B.C. 206 – A.D. 220) shows women performing a wide variety of work roles. According to most modern scholars, for a household (the main economic organization in early Chinese society) to succeed economically, a man and a woman each had to work at many different kinds of gendered tasks. In contrast, writers during the Han dynasty, rather than emphasizing the multitude of daily tasks women performed, constructed an idealized representation of female labor, singling out cloth production as the most important job and linking it to the concept of successful womanhood. In reality, however, a woman who devoted herself to making cloth, ignoring other work, would have been considered irresponsible.

Question 4 RC 복수

Consider each of the choices separately and select all that apply.

According to the passage, which of the following is true of Han dynasty writers' attitudes toward women and cloth production?

- ☐ A These writers presented cloth production as a woman's most important job.
- ☐ B These writers believed that women who devoted significant time to tasks other than cloth production were irresponsible.
- ☐ C These writers linked cloth production with the concept of successful womanhood.

Question 5 RC

Select one answer choice.

The author of the passage would be most likely to agree with which of the following evaluations of Han dynasty writers' views of labor?

- ○ A These writers assumed that labor was more divided along gender lines than was in fact the case.
- ○ B These writers failed to distinguish the variety of tasks included in men's labor.
- ○ C These writers overestimated the role of household labor in the Chinese economy.
- ○ D These writers underestimated the contribution of men's labor to the Chinese economy.
- ○ E These writers exaggerated the prominence of cloth production in women's labor.

Question 6 SE

Select the two answer choices that produce completed sentences that are alike in meaning.

Question 8 SE

Select the two answer choices that produce completed sentences that are alike in meaning.

The hypothesis that the moon formed from a planetary impact could account for the _____ of water and other volatiles on the Moon since such an impact would have caused volatiles to escape into space.

- ☐ A condensation
- ☐ B paucity
- ☐ C nullity
- ☐ D ephemerality
- ☐ E dearth
- ☐ F occurrence

Question 9 SE

Select the two answer choices that produce completed sentences that are alike in meaning.

In his discussion of art, Ramachandran makes no distinction between the arousal value of a stimulus and its aesthetic value; he takes the emotional power of an artwork to be _____ that work's aesthetic quality.

- ☐ A predictive of
- ☐ B tantamount to
- ☐ C subordinate to
- ☐ D dependent on
- ☐ E commensurate with
- ☐ F derived from

Questions 10 to 12 are based on the following passage.

Much recent work has examined the claim that women encounter increasing obstacles relative to men as they move up the organizational ladder in business. This proposition, which we term the increasing-disadvantage model, is a core element of the popular glass ceiling metaphor. Despite continued widespread public acceptance of the glass ceiling idea and some consistent findings, most research to date has failed to support the increasing disadvantage model. Indeed, several studies based on private-sector firms find that women's mobility prospects improve, rather than decline, as they climb upward in corporate hierarchies. In the public sector, researchers have found either no sex differences in mobility or a larger female disadvantage in lower grades.

Comparing cross-sectional national samples of workers, Baxter and Wright found no evidence in the United States, and only limited evidence in Sweden and Australia, that women's probability of being located in a higher versus a lower hierarchical level declined relative to men's at higher levels. Taken together, these findings suggest that the glass ceiling may be a myth. Women's scarcity in top organizational ranks may simply represent the cumulative effect of a constant—or even decreasing-disadvantage at successive hierarchical levels.

Question 10 RC

Select one answer choice.

The primary purpose of the passage is to

- ○A compare two explanations for a recurring problem
- ○B summarize evidence relevant to a hypothesis
- ○C point out inconsistencies in a set of findings
- ○D account for the persistence of a point of view
- ○E reconsider the origins of an ongoing issue

Question 11 RC

(Highlighted portion: "limited evidence")

Select one answer choice.

Based on the passage, which of the following is true of the "limited evidence" from Sweden and Australia?

- ○A It lends support to the increasing-disadvantage model.
- ○B It correlates with findings on women's mobility from most other countries.
- ○C It suggests important cultural similarities between these countries.
- ○D It points to a phenomenon not widely recognized in these countries.
- ○E It helps explain the persistence of the glass ceiling.

Question 12 RC

(Highlighted portion: “proposition”)

Select one answer choice.

The author of the passage and those accepting the "proposition" would most likely agree with which of the following?

○A Lower down on the organizational ladder, women tend to experience fewer disadvantages than they do at higher levels.

○B Women experience no more disadvantages in moving up the organizational ladder than do men.

○C The degree of disadvantage experienced by women remains constant as women move up the organizational ladder.

○D The obstacles to women's advancement vary significantly from country to country.

○E Women face some disadvantage at each stage of the organizational ladder.

a transitional	supersede	predecessor

Questions 5 to 6 are based on the following passage.

> Feminist scholars have tended to regard women in the nineteenth-century United States who elected to remain single as champions of women's autonomy and as critics of marriage as an oppressive institution. Indeed, many nineteenth-century American women who participated in reform movements or who distinguished themselves as writers and professionals were single. Yet this view of single women tends to distort the meaning of their choices. The nineteenth century saw the elevation of marriage for love as a spiritual ideal. Consequently, it became socially acceptable for women not to marry if such an ideal marriage could not be realized with an available suitor. Thus, many women's choice to remain single reflected not a negative view of marriage but a highly idealistic one.

Question 5 RC

Select one answer choice.

The author of the passage implies that many nineteenth-century American women chose to remain single because they

○A believed that marriage required them to give up much of their autonomy

○B had attitudes toward marriage that were influenced by contemporary reform movements

○C wanted to take advantage of increasing opportunities to distinguish themselves as professionals

○D doubted that their own marriage would live up to their notion of what a marriage ought to be

○E had a negative view of marriage fostered by a change in social attitudes during the nineteenth century

Question 6 RC 복수

(Highlighted portion: "Feminist scholars")

Consider each of the choices separately and select all that apply.

The author of the passage suggests that the feminist scholars mentioned in the first sentence distort the meaning of certain nineteenth-century American women's choices by

☐A ascribing those choices to a particular attitude toward marriage

☐B ignoring evidence about single women's motives for becoming writers or professionals

☐C overestimating the number of nineteenth-century American women who were single by choice

Questions 7 to 9 are based on the following passage.

Where grazing reduces species diversity, a rangeland can be considered overgrazed. Conversely, where species diversity is increased by grazing, that grazing can be considered well managed. Although popular consensus characterizes the intensive grazing of rangelands surrounding the Mediterranean Basin as overgrazing, such intensive grazing is not necessarily destructive.

Crawley argues that the primary way in which herbivores affect plant species diversity is not by eating plants to extinction but by selective feeding, which modifies competition among plant species. For example, some species can survive because competition from more aggressive species that have been grazed is reduced. This mechanism is one of several that underlie the intermediate-disturbance hypothesis, which holds that biodiversity is higher with moderate disturbance of the ecosystem than with low or heavy disturbance. The impact of grazing in Mediterranean ecosystems can be considered in terms of this hypothesis. However, the grazing intensity that is necessary to cause intermediate disturbance in the grazing-resistant Mediterranean shrublands is generally quite high, and low-intensity to moderate-intensity grazing is often ineffective in preventing the encroachment and dominance of woody vegetation. In a study comparing two Greek islands, one "heavily overgrazed" by the Cretan wild goat and the other undergrazed, Papageorgiou found that there were many more species on the "overgrazed" island.

Question 7 RC

Select one answer choice.

The primary purpose of the passage is to

○A describe a complex situation that evolved over time

○B trace the development of a popular conception

○C highlight similarities among different points of view regarding an issue

○D present a hypothesis that challenges a commonly held perception

○E introduce evidence that explains a puzzling phenomenon

Question 8 RC

Select one answer choice.

It can be inferred from the passage that which of the following would most likely take place in the Mediterranean shrublands if the intensity of grazing decreased significantly?

○A The dominance of woody vegetation would be reduced.

○B The relative success of plant species would not be modified.

○C The diversity of plant species would diminish.

○D The most destructive plants would be eradicated.

○E Conditions would be created that would require a rethinking of the intermediate-disturbance hypothesis.

Question 9 RC 복수

Consider each of the choices separately and select all that apply.

It can be inferred from the passage that supporters of the intermediate-disturbance hypothesis would most likely agree with which of the following claims?

- ☐ A An intermediate level of disturbance affects plant species diversity primarily when certain species are eaten to extinction.
- ☐ B An intermediate level of disturbance promotes greater plant variety.
- ☐ C The likelihood of survival of certain plant species increases with an intermediate level of disturbance.

Question 10 SE

Select the two answer choices that produce completed sentences that are alike in meaning.

If it is wrong to justify human selfishness on the basis of the alleged selfishness of nature, then it is equally mistaken to espouse _____ merely because some animals happily assist each other.

- ☐ A pragmatism
- ☐ B moderation
- ☐ C restraint

- ☐ E convoluted
- ☐ F extensive

Question 12 SE

Select the two answer choices that produce completed sentences that are alike in meaning.

Monarch butterflies sequester toxins in their skin to discourage predators, but black-backed orioles (Icterus abeillei) _____ the defense: they consume only the soft insides of the butterfly.

- ☐ A anticipate
- ☐ B disable
- ☐ C ignore
- ☐ D skirt
- ☐ E circumvent
- ☐ F disregard

Question 13 is based on the following passage.

> All the music from fourteenth-century Europe for which written scores survive is so complex and is written in such difficult notation that it could have been played only by musicians whose lives were dedicated solely to such performance. Yet fourteenth-century European accounts, which in this respect probably give accurate portrayals of their times, describe many members of the nobility who excelled not only in musical performance, but also in dancing, poetry, and painting.

Question 13 CR

Select one answer choice.

The statements given, if true, most strongly support which of the following?

- ○ A Some members of the nobility in fourteenth-century Europe abandoned other activities in order to become professional musicians.
- ○ B There were styles of music performed in the fourteenth century for which no written scores survive.
- ○ C Professional musicians in fourteenth-century Europe had more highly developed skills than do the most skilled professional musicians today.
- ○ D The fourteenth-century European accounts that describe members of the nobility as excelling in musical performance do not specify the amount of time these members devoted to music.
- ○ E Professional musicians in fourteenth-century Europe did not perform for gatherings of members of the nobility.

Questions 14 to 15 are based on the following passage.

Before feminist literary criticism emerged in the 1970s, the nineteenth-century United States writer Fanny Fern was regarded by most critics (when considered at all) as a prototype of weepy sentimentalism—a pious, insipid icon of conventional American culture. Feminist reclamations of Fern, by contrast, emphasize her non-sentimental qualities, particularly her sharply humorous social criticism. Most feminist scholars find it difficult to reconcile Fern's sardonic social critiques with her effusive celebrations of many conventional values. Attempting to resolve this contradiction, Harris concludes that Fern employed flowery rhetoric strategically to disguise her subversive goals beneath apparent conventionality. However, Tompkins proposes an alternative view of sentimentality itself, suggesting that sentimental writing could serve radical, rather than only conservative, ends by swaying readers emotionally, moving them to embrace social change.

Question 14 RC 복수

Consider each of the choices separately and select all that apply.

The passage suggests which of the following about the "contradiction" mentioned in the highlighted sentence?

- ☐ A It was not generally addressed by critics before the 1970s.
- ☐ B It is apparent in only a small number of Fern's writings
- ☐ C It has troubled many feminist critics who study Fern.

Question 15 RC

(Highlighted portion: "most critics")

Select one answer choice.

It can be inferred from the passage that Tompkins would be most likely to agree with which of the following about the "critics" mentioned in the passage?

- ○ A They accurately characterize the overall result Fern is aiming to achieve.
- ○ B They are not as dismissive of Fern as some feminist critics have suggested.
- ○ C They exaggerate the extent to which Fern intended her writing to serve a social purpose.
- ○ D They wrongly assume that sentimentalism must be a pejorative term.
- ○ E They fail to recognize that sentimental rhetoric plays to reader's emotions.
